PROTOTYPE HISTORY:

Caboosees were used on every freight train until the 1980s, when safety laws requiring the presence of cabooses and full crews were relaxed. In a bay window caboose, the crew monitoring the train sits in the middle of the car in a section of wall that projects from the side of the caboose. The windows set into these extended walls resemble architectural bay windows, so the caboose type was named. This type afforded a better view of the side of the train and eliminated the falling hazard of the cupola.
